The Battle of Lexington. The next morning, April 19, 1775, British soldiers reached Lexington and were confronted with two companies of patriot militiamen drawn up on the village green. Someone fired a shot and the redcoats poured several volleys into the American ranks. The militiamen fled for cover, leaving eight Massachusetts citizen-soldiers dead. This incident marked the beginning of the war.