

Although most of Earth's surface is covered in water, only about 2% of it is drinkable. Most land animals, including humans, depend on this precious 2% for survival.