Efforts to locate survivors in the rubble that had been the Twin Towers continues, and goes on for days. Thousands of professionals stand at the ready to help with the injured, but few injured show up. Most of the people who died at the Twin Towers became a part of the buildings that day. The American people begin referring to this site as "ground zero." Friends and relatives begin to post pictures of their lost friends and lost loved ones around New York City. Tonight members of the U.S. Congress join together on the steps of U.S. Capitol and sing "God Bless America."
