

Gerald R. Ford became Vice-President upon the resignation of Spiro T. Agnew. When President Nixon resigned, Mr. Ford became President. He chose Nelson Rockefeller for his Vice-President. Rockefeller was confirmed by Congress, and for the first time in history the nation's two top offices were held by men who were appointed, not elected to the office.