

The teeth of the Diplodocus were located at the front of the mouth and acted like a rake to strip foliage. Its nostrils were positioned high up on its head between the eyes instead of on the muzzle.

These eleven-ton creatures stood sixteen-feet high at the hips and were ninety-feet long. They once roamed parts of North America.