

When Abigail Powers Fillmore, a former teacher, came to the White House not even a Bible or dictionary could be found. After her husband obtained an appropriation from Congress, she chose a second story room and started the first White House library.