

President Roosevelt was the only man to be elected President of the United States more than twice. He died shortly after beginning his fourth term, and Harry S. Truman became President.