

The long-necked, long-tailed giant, Diplodocus, measured over 90 feet long. It was an herbivore, and scientists believe it used its long neck to poke into forests to eat the vegetation that would otherwise be unreachable. Diplodocus lived in North America during the Jurassic Period.