

DREAM CATCHER

The Ojibway Native American tribe hung dream catchers over their beds to prevent bad dreams. It was believed that the bad dreams could be caught in the net and the good dreams would flow through. Different objects were attached to the nets to encourage good dreams. Decorate the dream catcher, feathers, beads, and shells with Crayola® Crayons or Markers and cut them out. Glue the page to a piece of thin cardboard, such as a recycled file folder. With a hole punch, punch holes in the dream catcher and hanging objects. Tie a string to the objects and hang from the dream catcher. Tie a string to the top hole and hang the dream catcher.
